ORGANIZED BY

We become what we behold, we shape our tools and there after our tools shape us

- Marshall McLuhan

Media has been affecting the human consciousness and influencing the society at large demanding new skills and contributing to cultural and social changes which are often disruptive in their approach. Video games on the virtual network, news channel reports and narratives have resulted in major movements and have also converted a white lie to truth. While literature and culture have always been reflections of each other, Media in the age of Post Truth and Post Pandemic have created major interventions leading to new narratives and have led to the formation of new identities. The growing consensus among literary scholars is that the meaning of literature cannot be properly studied or understood outside of the specific medium of its transmission and archival. Hence Media becomes pivotal today as a study to appraise both literature and culture. Literature and Media are interdependent and thus to analyse the complex ways in which literary texts and culture intersect with media to form new paradigms which paves way for new areas of study.

The two day conference aims to introduce the interdisciplinary frame work of Literature, Culture, Media and Technology and allow the participants to theorize and explore its intersections and disruptions.
